

London's last truffle

She wouldn't let her children know the fear; she'd rehearsed this day endlessly.

Sirens howling useless warnings: incoming nuclear missile, three minutes.

"C'mon kids." Voice holding steady, "let's make truffles. Break this chocolate into the pan."

"Mummy, how long will the chocolate take to melt?"

"No time at all, Sweetheart."